

All I've ever wanted to do was play music. It started at age 3 with the Thumbelina sound track, which grew into discovering CMT where I would watch Leann Rimes, Terri Clarke, and Shania Twain in awe, and sparked my interest in writing and learning guitar when I discovered Taylor Swifts "Teardrops on my Guitar" in my teenage years. Country music always spoke to me, and I always wanted to be able to write something others could relate to in the way I related to all of those iconic female artists. I grew up performing anywhere I could, but at 18 it came time to go to university and get a degree. I put music on the back burner for a few years, always feeling a piece of my heart missing. Adulthood began and I found myself going through hardships that I never imagined I'd have to face, and had no idea how to navigate them emotionally. That's when country music and writing came back into my life. This past year I have had the pleasure of recording my first EP, releasing my first single, and my first music video. I have made connections in Nashville, here in Calgary, had the pleasure of recording at AudioHouse, and have met some unbelievably talented people in this industry. And I know this is just the beginning. I've always told myself the goal was to release and produce music that people could relate to, and I hope that is what I have been able to do and will be able to continue to do. I plan to continue to work on my brand, develop my sound, and get my music out there. I may not have the largest online following as of yet, but if I have been able to relate to just one person with my music then that's a win for me. I am working to become the best I can be, I look forward to releasing a full album, performing live shows again, and working alongside the talented musicians I have had the pleasure of meeting thus far.